Climb into the passenger seat and join time traveller, Ian Mortimer, on a voyage into the Elizabethan age. In his book, 'The Time Traveller's Guide to Medieval England', you will find famous individuals like William Shakespeare walking leisurely along London's streets. You will also meet ordinary people who earned a paltry sum and struggled to pay their taxes.

Yes, the past really is a foreign country and the closest we usually get to learning about it is by reading history books. Mortimer gives us a fascinating insight into the hidden corners of the past. Mortimer's highly original and very readable book allows the Elizabethan world to unfold with all its disease, religion, politics and persisting fears.

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

Blake felt the sun on his back as he unpacked supplies on the bank of the Koyukuk River. Hearing the purr of the engine, he looked up to see a helicopter swooping in to land nearby. His dad, Neil, was in the passenger seat. To celebrate his father's sixty-fifth birthday, Blake had planned an easy six-day expedition on a raft. Spring thaw came late to the region and the Stanfields would be the first to raft in the river that season. 5

The next morning, in their yellow life jackets the two men assembled the two-seater raft. They rehearsed their plan to float it and then set off. Ice covered the banks and blocks of it broke off at times, striking the water with a sharp slap.

As they negotiated a corner, they suddenly saw a wall of ice, 60 centimetres high and 90 centimetres wide, covering the river and its banks. Without warning the raft crashed into the ice sheet and flipped over. Blake and Neil grappled desperately to hold onto the ice ledge, but the river overpowered them. It sucked them under. 10

Struggling and gasping for air, Blake managed to surface. In the eerie light filtering through the ice, Blake saw his father behind him thrashing about. "Keep your feet in front of you!" he yelled. That was the position that would provide the most protection if they crashed into the rocks. The two were carried by the current and intermittently dragged under before popping up in the open again. 15

Suddenly, they were separated. Blake surfaced and scrambled towards the bank, searching for his father. Downstream, he spotted a flash of yellow being swept away and he ran after it. An oar had surfaced in the water near Neil. Grabbing it, he was able to float. His chest heaved as he struggled to breathe. Blake found a fallen branch and he held it out to his father. Neil seized it and his son pulled him in. Neil was shivering badly from the extreme cold. Blake knew he had to warm his dad up. He found he still had his water-resistant lighter. Almost all their other supplies were lost. He built a fire. Next, he constructed a small shelter with branches. Then he stacked rocks for a fire pit. During the night, the men took turns stoking the fire. 20 25

The next evening, Nick, a pilot, took several tourists on a sightseeing flight. Midway through the tour, he spotted a raft on the river. Flying downstream, he thought he saw something moving on the riverbank. He flew down for a closer look.

Hearing a plane, Blake bolted upright. He grabbed his life jacket and ran out onto the bank, waving his arms wildly as the plane roared above the treetops and passed over him. Then he dropped to his knees and prayed. 30

Nick saw the man and rocked his wings to acknowledge he had spotted him.

Minnie hated dogs. Most of all, she hated the horrid dog across the hall that kept up a constant racket especially after the terrible incident a month ago. She had been quietly waiting for the elevator, carrying her favourite handbag. Suddenly, the door of 3A was thrown open and the hideous beast ran out. Snarling, he jumped up and pulled at her bag. She tried to snatch it away but the dog bared his teeth at her and began savaging it. Terrified Minnie dropped the bag and cowered in the corner as the ferocious animal ripped it to shreds. 05

"What's going on here?" shouted a deep, masculine voice and Minnie shrank even further into the corner. Smith, the huge occupant of 3A, charged down the hall.

"I'm sorry," said Smith hooking the leash onto his naughty miniature poodle's collar. "Please allow me to replace your handbag. This will never happen again, I promise you." 10

"It had better not," said Minnie indignantly, as she scuttled down the hall to the safety of her apartment. She had hoped she would get over it, but her terror at the thought of another attack grew with each day. Eventually, she concluded that either the dog or she would have to go.

Then, she found the answer to her problem. Leafing through a copy of Better Living magazine, she came across an article entitled 'Chocolate, the Deadly Treat for Dogs'. As she read, Minnie was astonished to learn that eating even a small amount of chocolate could cause a severe reaction in a small dog. The most dangerous was baking chocolate. As little as 15 grammes could be life-threatening to a miniature poodle, although it was quite harmless to a large dog. This is due to the theobromine it contained. In addition, dogs will wolf down large amounts of chocolate. She was even more pleased to learn that the symptoms might not appear for several hours. 15 20

Giving Smith's dog the fatal dose turned out to be easy. Meeting in the hall one day, Smith again apologised and tried to pay for her bag. "It's absolutely all right," Minnie assured him. "Just to show there are no hard feelings, let me give the dog a treat. It's chocolate. Is that all right?"

She rushed off to retrieve the piece of baking chocolate she had prepared and, rather nervously, offered it to the poodle. He seemed to enjoy it and wagged his tail in thanks. The next time she saw Smith in the hallway, the dog was not with him. To her seemingly concerned query, he said, "He's dead. Strangest thing. Just had a seizure and that was it. Too bad." 25

"What a shame," commiserated Minnie.

Smith replied that the poodle had been getting on, so it was just a matter of time. "I wasn't really fond of that dog. He was too small and mild for a man like me," confessed Smith. "So I got another dog, a real man's dog. Would you like to meet him? Hold on just a second and I'll get him." 30

As Smith turned and headed towards his apartment, Minnie desperately pushed the button for the elevator. She had an ominous feeling about all this. But the elevator remained shut. Hearing Smith's door open, she turned. A huge brown hound hurtled down the hall towards her, pulling Smith behind him. Even though the dog was leashed, the huge man could hardly control it. 35

"This is Brutus," panted Smith. "He's a Rottweiler¹. A real man's dog."
